EVENTS PROMOTE ACCESSIBILITY FORUM+TRADE SHOW

MEETING ATTENDEES LINK UP WITH VENDORS AND INDUSTRY EXPERTS

Individuals who have suffered major injuries, debilitating illnesses or deteriorating conditions caused by aging want to keep active, stay in their homes, and continue being self-sufficient as long as possible. They are remodeling or converting their homes to make that possible.

Demand is on the rise to make homes more mobility friendly so individuals can continue living comfortably and independently, and builders and remodelers want to find out more how to serve this growing segment of the industry.

As part of the ongoing commitment to keep BIAW members informed, the Accessible Housing Council presented the fourth annual Accessible Housing

Forum and Trade Show. Held during the Winter Board meeting in Olympia on February 23, members attended the forum to hear from BIAW members Tim Dickey and Jim Briedenbach, who shared their experience and expertise on how to best serve clients and the accessibility market. Afterwards, attendees visited vendors who showcased the latest products and services.

Trade show vendor Tim Dickey of Accessible Living Concepts shows off current offerings to BIAW members stopping by his booth.

What makes this annual event unique is that these functions are free to BIAW members—even those that are not scheduled to attend the board meeting.

Accessible housing and universal design are fields that will continue to be part of the changing environment of home buyers and homeowners. It is BIAW's goal to bring in experts and help provide answers for members.
